ETTERS AGAIN HEADS CENTRE CO. SCHOOLS

Chosen Superintendent Over R. U. Wasson for 4yr. Term.

VOTE WAS 118 TO 31

Largely Attended Convention of Centre County School Directors on Tuesday—Rainy Weather Did Not Dampen Enthusiam.

County Superintendent of Schools David O. Etters, of State College, was elected by an overwhelming vote Tuesday to the ensuing term of four years. He defeated R. U. Wasson, of Coburn, by a vote of 118 to 31. The election was held at the annual convention of the school directors of Centre County and was attended by 149 of the 175 members. Four of the five directors from Rush township were delayed enroute to Bellefonte in an automobile and did not arrive in town until after the convention had been adjourned. Every effort possible was made to defer action in the convention in courtesy to the Rush township members, but the vote on County Superintendent was finally taken in their absence.

The contest for County Superintendent was interesting but one sided. The only aspirants in the field were Professor Etters and Mr. Wasson. Some time ago there were indications that a three cornered contest might develop, but this failed to materialize and Professor Etters ran away with the honors. At that Mr. Wasson captured several solid or almost solid borough or township delegations. After his election had been announced Professor Etters thanked the directors for the renewal of confidence in his management of the county schools and pledged his best efforts to make the next four years helpful and profitable to all. The convention took no action in determing his salary, therefore by law it is made $2,000 per year.

The convention was called to order shortly after 10 o'clock and the selection of Rev. R. P. Miller as president proved to be a splendid one, for he conducted the proceedings with business-like despatch, according all a fair hearing and at the same time sticking to business while there was any to be transacted. Charles F Cook, of Bellefonte, was chosen reading clerk. W. H. Austin, of Liberty township, and H. F. McManaway, of Millheim, were selected as tellers. The question of deferring balloting for County Superintendent until four of the five Rush township directors might arrive was brought before the convention in the form of a motion that a recess be taken until 11 o'clock. There was a universal desire to extend every courtesy to the Rush township members, at the same time the convention was of the belief that the business on hand necessitated going ahead. A. C. Mingle, of Bellefonte, suggested that the balloting be proceeded with until Rush township might be reached on the roll and that then, if desired, a brief recess be taken. This seemed to appeal to both directors and spectators who comfortably filled the Court room, and the motion to recess until 11 o'clock was voted down.

Motions were then declared to be in order for the nomination of candidates for County Superintendent. M. S. McDowell, of State College, took the floor to present the name of Professor Etters. He spoke plainly and along practical lines. He prefaced his mention of the name of Professor Etters by the effective illustration of passengers on a railroad train placing their confidence in an engineer who was qualified by experience to know the responsibility of his task, to be familiar with the defects of roadbed, crossings, bridges, etc. In entrusting our lives to one of two engineers, Mr. McDowell added, we naturally would select the one whom we knew to be qualified by experience and ability. The molding of the lives of boys and girls, said Mr. McDowell, is of even greater importance. To this he added that their care and training should be entrusted to a County Superintendent of recognized ability, one who has been a teacher in both lower and higher grades. The election of teachers, he pointed out, is a vital factor, and the choosing of a County Superintendent strikes directly home for the good or injury of the schools. To his mind, said Mr. McDowell, the office of the County Superintendent is of greater importance than any other in the county. He then proposed the name of Professor Etters and it was seconded by Dr. Fred Robison, also of State College.

James E. Harter, of Coburn, presented the name of Mr. Wasson. He made no address, merely proposing that Mr. Wasson be selected. No additional names were suggested and Mr. Cook, the reading clerk, was directed to call the roll, leading off with Bellefonte Borough. When the calling of the vote reached Rush township it was brought to the attention of President Miller that the School Code required that the roll be finished in alphabetical order, and this made it impossible to lay aside the Rush township district temporarily. The balloting then proceeded to afinish. Anounncement by Tellers Austin and McManaway that their tally showed 118 for Professor Etters and 31 for Mr. Wasson was greeted with applause. The directors in voting stood up and announced the name of their candidate. The vote by districts was as follows:

PRESIDENT WILSON ON GO-TO-CHURCH-SUNDAY

Sends Autograph Letter to Lutheran Church.

WANAMAKER'S REASONS

Merchant Prince Explains Why He Attends Church—President Says Church Going Quickens Inspiration in People to do Good.

"Go to church Sunday" was observed in the several churches of Bellefonte last Sunday, with the result that many persons who had carelessly drifted into the stay-at-home habit turned out for the services on that day. An interesting feature of the services at the St. John's Lutheran church was the reading by the pastor, Rev. W. M. B. Glanding, of autograph letters from President Wilson and John Wanamaker emphasizing the value of such movements to reawaken interest in church-going and church affairs. The letter from the White House was as follows:

"I need not tell you that your effort to quicken the church-going habit among our people meets with my warmest sympathy. It has always seemed to me that the habit of church-going somehow lay at the foundation of steadfast character and the maintenance of the standards of life.

(Signed)

"WOODROW WILSON."

John Wanamaker, in his letter to Mr. Glanding, set forth four reasons why he attends church, as follows:

"Your letter requesting written reasons for attendance at church is on my table today (April 15th) and a few of the reasons why I attend church might be summed up as follows:—

"1. Because I was brought up from childhood to go to the House of the Lord, and through the more than seventy-five years of my life my early training in this respect has constantly followed me, so that I never miss a Sabbath from its services unless ill or Providentially hindered in other ways.

"2. Because Sunday, being a day of rest, according to the Scriptures, and as the only real rest can come through a change in our daily routine, the attendance at Divine worship furnishes the necessary relaxation by focusing the attention of the worshipper from the things of time to the things of eternity.

"3. Because we are commanded to 'Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy" and the only way in which we can do this acceptably to Him from whom the Commandments come is by prayer and praise and meditation in His Sanctuary.

"4. Because, as the body needs physical food, so the soul needs Spiritual food, and the Church of God has been established on earth to supply this need.

"Yours very truly,

"JOHN WANAMAKER."

MOVES TO MILESBURG

State-Centre Electric Company Decides to Remove Plant.

The board of directors of the State-Centre Electric Company last Friday formally decided to remove the central lighting and power plant from Bellefonte to Milesburg. Manager Thompson explained that the change in location was governed by a decision to use water power instead of steam.

The old Green mill at Milesburg, purchased by the company from Bellefonte borough at the time a franchise was granted, will be converted into a lighting and power plant. It is the belief of Manager Thompson that the work of remodeling and building and installing new machinery will require about four months. A large concrete dam will be constructed and a railroad siding put down.

The present plant in Bellefonte will be continued until the new one is completed After that time the building and site of the old plant will be for sale or rent.

Incompatible Offices.

In an opinion handed down by Judge Baldridge, of Blair county, last Saturday the court decided against F. D. Eger retaining his seat on the school board of Juniata township after he had been elected to and accepted the office of road supervisor. The gist of the opinion is contained in one paragraph, which quotes the positive and specific provision of the law that a man cannot hold the office of road supervisor and that of school director at the same time. The court also instructs that the acceptance of the second office was, in fact, a resignation of the first. The school board had already declared the seat vacant and elected a successor to Eger.

TRAFFIC ORDINANCE AS AID TO PUBLIC SAFETY

Borough Council Adopts Helpful Measure.

REGULATIONS UNIFORM

Follow General Lines of System in Force in Many Cities and Towns—Careful Study and Observance of New Rules by Public Urged.

Bellefonte borough Council on Monday night adopted a traffic regulation ordinance, one drafted not to work a hardship on drivers of automobiles and other vehicles but to minimize so far as possible the danger of accidents. The regulations embodied in the ordinance are uniform with the general traffic system in force in Williamsport, Harrisburg and numerous other places. The ordinance in full is printed in another column of "The Republican".

It is the hope of Council that the public will carefully study and endeavor to comply with the new regulations, cooperate with Burgess Blanchard and the police officials in the enforcement of the ordinance and aid in every way in affording protection from accident to both drivers and citizens in general. The large increase in the number of automobiles in use necessitated the preparation of new traffic rules to meet new conditions.

In a general way, the ordinance requires that all vehicles keep to the right; when overtaking and passing others turn to the left and do not pull to the right until far enough ahead to avoid interference with the vehicle passed; before passing a vehicle from which persons are alighting slow up until such persons are safely on the sidewalk; in turning corner to the right keep to the right curb; in turning to left keep as far as possible to right of intersection of center lines of two streets; vehicles emerging from alleys, garages, etc. must be under such control that they may be stopped immediately in case of danger; visible or audible signals must be given when about to make a turn, indicating direction of travel; muffler-cutouts prohibited in streets of borough; lights of electrically lighted cars must be dimmed while cars are standing in streets.

Constables and police officers in the borough are empowered to make arrests without warrant upon view for violations of the ordinance. The Burgess is given power to close, by proclamation, any street or streets to traffic in case of emergency. He is also empowered to direct the police to regulate the standing and hitching of teams in streets and alleys.

For the first violation of the ordinance the penalty is a fine of $5 to $25, and costs, and 10 days imprisonment for refusal to pay; for second offense in a year, fine of $10 to $50 and 20 days imprisonment for refusal to pay. For a third offense the penalty is double that for the second violation.

In addition to passing the traffic ordinance Council disposed of a number of routine matters. A. A. Dale, as counsel for the State-Centre Electric Company, explained to Council that his company contemplated removing all poles from Thomas Street and proposed erecting poles and stringing wires in the alley in the rear of that street, adding that his company desired to be informed as to its legal rights in the matter. The matter was discussed further at a meeting later in the evening at which Mr. Dale conferred with the Street Committee and Borough Solicitor Mitchell. W. A. Lyon reported to Council that the water duplicate amounted to approximately $8,2000. Burgess Blanchard paid over to Council $18.75 collected in fines during April. Various water and street repairs were reported.

The Fire and Police Committee was empowered to purchase summer uniforms for Policemen Dukeman and Knisely. W. R. Shope informed Council that several property owners had thus far neglected to comply with a recent request that debris of a character injurious to health be removed from the rear of their properties. Council will now act in the matter. A balance of $465.83 in the hands of Borough Treasurer Gehret on May 1st was reported.

Mr. Lyon reported that the Borough Solicitor had been directed to bring suit for delinquent taxes amounting to $8,000 or $9,000, to protect which liens had already been entered. A. G. Morris was authorized to put down a five-foot crossing nearby his residence on Linn Street, the same to be at grade. Dr. J. L. Seiber has been given a grade for a sidewalk in

MISSIONARY MEETING

Interesting Session Held in Bellefonte Last Week.

The twenty-sixth annual meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary society of the Altoona district, Methodist Episcopal church, was held in the Bellefonte Methodist Episcopal church, last Thursday and Friday.

Mrs. H. A. Hutchison, of Altoona, the district secretary, was in the chair and Mrs. W. T. Ketler, also of Altoona, was the efficient recorder. The opening devotional and preparatory service was in charge of Mrs. Hutchinson and was participated in by a number of the delegates. The theme was "The Things That Lead to Glory."

A warm welcome was extended the visitors by Miss Lillian Smith, of Bellefonte, and the response of Mrs. W. W. Andrews, of Philipsburg, was equally cordial and appreciative.

The following committees were appointed: Woman's Friend subscriptions, Miss Lilliam Smith; Children's Friends, Mrs. J. Freas; resolutions, Mrs. Buck, Mrs. Andrews, Miss Curry; enrollment, Mrs. Louder. Miss Bertha Curry, of WarriorsMark, sang a beautiful solo, entitled, "A Little Bit of Love."

Mrs. J. A. Olewine, of Bellefonte, read a paper on the "Organization of Woman's Missionary Societies." The movement is extending to the colleges, where women are preparing for work. This is the Woman's Century

"The Call to Action and the Power" was the theme of Mrs. Mary C. Buck. Her talk was most helpful, emphasizing the transforming power of the lives of those who heed Christ's call.

Mrs. M. E. Purdy, of Sunbury, conference secretary, spoke impressively, making a special plea for literature.

A beautiful organ voluntary by Herbert Gray opened the evening service. After the devotional exercises, Miss Bertha Curry delighted the audience with a solo, "Jesus."

Mrs. Hutchison then introduced Miss Carrie Purdy, who spent eighteen years in Mexico in mission work. Her theme was "Mexico's Great Awakening." The yesterday, today and tomorrow of Mexico; the love of liberty; the right of freedom; the fact that only eleven per cent, of the population can read and write; taxation without representatiion; a country not ready for self government; Madero an idealist and spiritualist; the devastation of the country; the attitude of our own Christian people during this rebellion; the faithfulness of the ministers, even in persecution; the only hope of Mexico is intervention by Christian countries; the two-fold duty—to broaden and deepen the Christian life of Mexico; the privilege to give our next door neighbor life and liberty, Christian civilization all these thoughts were beautifully and strongly emphasized.

After devotions conducted by Mrs. Purdy, reports from auxiliaries and bands were heard, the result being highly encouraging to the workers. The Altoona district has the honor of leading all the districts in the Philadelphia branch in new societies, having organized five in little more than half a year. Miss Curry sang another beautiful solo.

Mrs. Anna Hicks, of Altoona, for a number of years one of the most faithful workers of the organization, read a fine paper on "Two Auxiliaries," contrasting strongly the one in which the members are interested and another which needs awakening.

"Our Standard Bearers' Society" was described by Miss Bessie Green, of Altoona, in a well written and informing paper. Mrs J. S. Freas, of Altoona, gave an impressive idea of "The Delegate's Mission."

Mrs. Purdy illustrated by maps an informing address showing the location of mission fields. The importance of people reading literature and knowing of the work was again emphasized. Miss Purdy held the close attention of the convention by another talk on her work in Mexico.

An impressive devotional service closed a splendid convention.

Held on Serious Charge.

John Statton, aged about 28 years, was picked up at Curtin and placed under arrest last Saturday to await trial on a serious charge preferred against him in Clinton County. He was lodged in the jail at Lock Haven. A 13 year old girl, a relative of Statton, is alleged to figure in the case, which originated in Bald Eagle township, Clinton County. Four charges are filed against Statton as a result of an investigation made by District Attorney H. T. Hall, of Lock Haven. Statton was arrested by Detective W. W. Pettingill, of Lock Haven.

Good Suggestion to Bellefonte People

It is surprising the amount of old, foul matter the simple mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., known as Adler-i-ka, drains from the system. This remedy became famous by curing appendicitis and acts on BOTH the upper and lower bowel so thoroughly that ONE DOSE relieves sour stomach, gas on the stomach and constipation almost IMMEDIATELY. We are mighty glad we are Bellefonte agents for Adler-i-ka. Green's Pharmacy Company.

Accidents will happen, but the best regulated families keep Dr. Thomas' Eclectic Oil for such emergencies. Two sizes 25 and 50c at all stores.

CORROBORATION

Of Interest to Bellefonte Readers.

For months Bellefonte citizens have seen in these columns enthusiastic praise of Doan's Kidney Pills by Bellefonte residents. Would these prominent people recommend a remedy that had not proven reliable? Would they confirm their statements after years had elapsed if personal experience had not shown the remedy to be worthy of endorsement? The following statement should carry conviction to the mind of every Bellefonte reader.

Mrs. John Anderson 245 S. Spring St., Bellefonte, Pa., says: I willingly confirm the public statement I gave Doan's Kidney Pills two years ago, after they had benefited me greatly. I procured this remedy at Green's Pharmacy Co., when suffering from backache and severe pains in my loins, and it brought prompt and permanent relief. Another of my family was also cured of kidney trouble by Doan's Kidney Pills."

Mrs. Anderson is only one of many Bellefonte people who have gratefully endorsed Doan's Kidney Pills. If your back aches—if your kidneys bother you, don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for Doan's Kidney Pills, the same that Mrs. Anderson had—the remedy backed by home testimony. 50c all stores. RINGS OF AIR.

How to Blow Out a Lighted Candle Twelve Feet Away.

The distance from which an average man can blow out a candle rarely exceeds three feet. If he is an adept at blowing smoke rings, however, a candle may be extinguished at twelve feet. Of course the smoke isn't necessary. An ordinary air ring will do and has the added advantage of being invisible. Simply pucker the mouth as you would to blow a smoke ring and expel air in a quick, sharp manner. It takes a good deal of practice to do it.

An easier way to show the effect if one is doubtful is to place a sheet of cloth or canvas over the open side of a box otherwise closed, making a small, round hole in another side. Then tap in a sharp manner on the canvas and invisible air rings will be produced. If the hole is pointed at a person's face and the rings are made he will feel them as they strike his face. Only a few trials are necessary to extinguish a candle at twelve feet. To render the rings visible a smudge may be burned in the box, or a small dish of ammonia may be placed side by side with a small dish of hydrochloric acid, the combined fumes of these liquids making a dense smoke.

The explanation why one can put out the candle at twelve feet is that the energy of expulsion is conserved and practically all retained in the smoke ring, while a simple blowing has to set in motion a whole stream of air and is therefore wasteful.—Chicago Record-Herald.

FORCE OF VIBRATION.

A Musical Chord That Shattered a Huge Glass Bowl.

Discussing the proposition that a wineglass can be broken or shattered to pieces by a musical chord, Edgar Lucien Larkin in the New York American says:

"I had a huge glass bowl one foot in diameter resting on its glass stand. The flint glass was from one-quarter to three-quarters of an inch thick. I rosined a violin bow, drew it across the edge, and the entire hemisphere of solid glass disintegrated into hundreds of small pieces. The sound of breaking into fragments was entirely unknown to me, a crackling or grinding, and the bits of glass flew far apart.

"I had used this same bowl before classes for several years with violin bows. But on this particular day the students as well as I were surprised at the breaking and unearthly noise.

"The fact is I happened to vibrate the bowl with its key note—that is, set harmonic rate, which means the precise rate with which it was able to vibrate to send forth that note, for notes are rates of vibration, and they all obey rigid and beautiful harmonic mathematical laws, and these agree with other set and fixed laws."

The Great Leveler.

A well known New York millionaire and his wife went to a trottery one afternoon with the idea of doing a little incognito dancing. One of the professional partners approached.

"May I have the pleasure?" he said. The lady was gracious, and they whirled off into a lively onestep. When the number was over the rich man's wife complimented the professional on his dancing.

"Thank you, Mrs. Blank," he murmured, calling her by her real name. The husband pricked up his ears. "How the deuce did you know who we were?" he asked.

"Why, don't you remember me?" said the professional cavalier, straightening his beautifully tailored figure. "I was your chauffeur two years ago."—New York Post.

Gardening.

God Almightie first Planted a Garden, and indeed it is the Purest of Human pleasures. It is the Greatest Refreshment to the Spirits of Man; without which Buildings and Palaces are but Grosse Handyworks: And a man shall ever see that when Ages grow to Civility and Elegancie, Men come to Build Stately sooner than to Garden Finely; As if Gardening were the Greater Perfection.—Bacon.

HOW TO DANCE THE MAXIXE

By ODGERS T. GURNEE

Illustrated With Specially Posed Photographs

THE Maxixe is the latest foreign dance to find popular favor on these shores and owes most of its popularity to the happy tempo of the music and the originality of the steps. Coming from Brazil via Paris, it has been changed somewhat to suit American tastes and morals.

The principal thing to remember in learning the Maxixe is the rotation of the positions. It is a difficult dance in that the hands play as important a role as the feet.

MR. AND MRS. ROWLEY DOWNS IN A PERFECT MAXIXE TURN POSITION.

The principle of the Maxixe step is somewhat on the order of a lengthened polka step. It is a gliding motion, with the feet at right angles. The advanced foot alternates between heel and toe, while the other foot slides up until they touch.

The rotation of the figures is as follows:

Four straight steps, the man going forward. Four steps in open position, with man's left and girl's right feet advanced.

Next comes the basic step of the Maxixe, the turn. On the fifth forward step bend forward from the waist, turn slightly on the heel and, going forward on the other foot, repeat the step. Continue this turn, alternating heel and toe, for four counts. Next come four more straight steps. While these steps are being taken the position of the arms is changed. The left hands are clasped over the head, and the right hands are clasped behind the girl's back. Four turns are done from this position.

Following the fourth turn, swing the girl around so that you are in an open position, but she has her back toward you. Hold the left hands out straight to the side and hold her right hand on her hip. From this position the skating step is done. This consists of the regular Maxixe step on first the left and then the right foot. On the second count of the step to the right do a long gliding dip, turning just a little to be in position for the next step.

From the skating step the man stands directly behind the girl, holding both arms outstretched. They do the Maxixe step on alternate feet, but the man must take longer steps, carrying him from side to side, so that on the right step the girl's head is on his left shoulder, and vice versa. With the man still behind the girl, eight side steps are taken, in the course of which the girl must make three half turns. This brings them face to face, and four turns on heel and toe follow.

It is now time to do the famous Mercury step. Take four straight steps in one step position (facing each other), follow with a half corde from the tango and you are ready. The actual step of the Mercury is as follows:

On the last step of the corde the man's right foot is slightly advanced, his left flat on the floor. The girl's right foot is also flat on the floor and her left back a few inches.

The man must take a firm hold on the girl's shoulder with right hand and hold her right hand down on a level with his waist. He raises his right knee until it touches the girl's left knee, and she then jumps into the air about a foot, throwing the left leg back. The touch of the man's knee must be very slight, all of the jump coming from his left hand and a slight spring on the girl's right foot.

This ends the series of steps, and one can go into the turn and repeat them if desired.

Any number of semi-original steps can be devised for the Maxixe, but care must be taken that they are in keeping with the spirit of the dance. It is better to use variations of other standard steps. For instance, the turn from flirtation position and the jumpless Mercury are very pretty figures.

The Maxixe Mercury

Posed by Mr. and Mrs. Rowley Downs.

THIS is the final figure in the Maxixe. It is also the most difficult to do well. The picture illustrates a perfect position for the start of the step. They have taken four walking steps, a half corde, and now the man's knee is touching hers. This is the signal for the jump. Notice how firmly he is holding her shoulder with his right hand.

INTERNATIONAL Harvester manure spreaders have a score of good features in their construction. Each one is the result of careful field experiment.

An I H C spreader is low enough for easy loading, yet it has plenty of clearance underneath. The rear axle is well under the load, rear wheels have wide rims and Z-shaped lugs, insuring good traction under all conditions. Frame, wheels, and all driving parts are of steel. Apron tension is adjusted by a simple device. Winding of the beater is prevented by large diameter, and beater teeth are strong, square and chisel-pointed.

International manure spreaders are built in several styles and sizes, low or high, endless or return apron, for small farms or large. Examination will show sturdiness of construction in every detail. Repairs, if ever needed, may always be had of the local dealer.

Examine International spreaders at the dealer's. We will tell you who sells them, and we will send you interesting catalogues.

Altoona Gazette Changes Owners.

Henry W. Shoemaker, of New York, George C. Wilson, of Tyrone, and John D. Meyer, of Altoona, formerly of Centre Hall and Bellefonte, have purchased, the Altoona Gazette. These gentlemen have organized the Gazette corporation as follows: President, Henry W. Shoemaker; vice president, George C. Wilson; treasurer, John D. Meyer.

For some time the Gazette will be issued from its present office and few changes will occur in its general appearance for several weeks. It is the intention of the new proprietors to rejuvenate the plant and ultimately issue a first class afternoon paper. They will take their time, however, and when all their plans are completed will probably issue the paper under a new name and in a very greatly changed form.

John A. Fetterhoof died at Tyrone last Friday evening. Mr. Fetterhoof in his usual happy manner went to his work as usual Friday evening in the chemical department of the West Virginia Pulp and Paper mills, and after entering upon his duties of the evening he became violently ill. Dr. W. L. Lowrie, his family physician, was summoned and after rendering first aid, conveyed Mr. Fetterhoof to his home, where he died at 7.30 o'clock. Death was due to angina pectoria.

Deceased was born on the old Fetterhoof homestead near Spruce Creek, June 16, 1840. He was a son of the late Michael and Eliza Beigle Fetterhoof, early settlers of Huntingdon county. After reaching young manhood he moved to WarriorsMark valley where he resided twenty-one years, then removing to Tyrone.

ONE WAY TO PAY A DEBT.

A Suit That Lincoln Settled in His Own Peculiar Manner.

A crack brained attorney who lived in Springfield, supported mainly by the other lawyers of the place, became indebted in the sum of $2.50 to a wealthy citizen of the county. The creditor, failing after repeated efforts to collect the amount due him, came to Mr. Lincoln and asked him to bring suit. Lincoln explained the man's condition and circumstances and advised his client to let the matter rest, but the creditor's temper was up, and he insisted on bringing suit. Again Lincoln urged him to let the matter drop, adding, "You can make nothing out of him, and it will cost you a good deal more than the debt to bring suit."

The creditor was still determined to have his way and threatened to seek some other attorney who would be more willing to take charge of the matter than Lincoln appeared to be. Lincoln then said, "Well, if you are determined that suit shall be brought I will bring it, but my charge will be $10." The creditor paid over the money and gave peremptory orders that the suit should be brought that very day.

After his client's departure Lincoln went out of the office. He returned in about an hour with an amused look on his face. I asked what pleased him, and he replied: "I brought suit against —— and then hunted him up, told him what I had done, handed him half of the $10, and we went over to the squire's office. He confessed judgment and paid the bill." Lincoln added that he did not see any other way to make things so generally satisfactory.—"The Everyday Life of Abraham Lincoln."

TRAGIC SLEEPWALKING.

Incident Upon Which Bellini Based His Celebrated Opera.

Somnambulists can maintain their footing in the most perilous places so long as they remain in a state of somnambulism, but if suddenly awakened they instantly lose their self possession and balance.

On one occasion a young woman living in Dresden was seen at midnight walking on the edge of the roof of her house. Her family were immediately told of her plight, but were afraid to go near her. The neighbors gathered about the house and placed mattresses and blankets along the street in hopes that they might save her in case she fell.

She danced for over an hour on the slanting roof, apparently retaining her balance without difficulty, and every now and then she would advance to the edge and bow to the silent crowd standing many feet below her.

At last she climbed down on to the wide gutter which ran in front of the window through which she had come, with the evident intention of re-entering the house. The crowd watching her so intently drew a sigh of relief. But, unfortunately, her terrified relatives, thinking to assist her, had placed two lighted candles in the room near the window, and as she approached the light fell directly in her eyes.

Instantly the shock awakened her, and she swayed back and forth in her perilous position; then, with a frightful scream, she fell headlong to the ground. She was fatally hurt and died in a few hours. It was on this tragedy that Bellini wrote his celebrated opera "La Sonnambula."

Who Says Hens Have No Brains?

"Hens have no brains," declared the wife of a modern farmer as she chased a fat old Wyandotte toward the roosting place she should have sought voluntarily.

Before I could challenge the woman's statement the hen by a brilliant strategic movement completely eluded her pursuer and with a triumphant cackle disappeared in the tall grass. The method of her escape showed brains, there could be no two opinions about that, but it was her cackle that should have settled any wavering doubt in the mind of her detractor, for that cackle was uttered at exactly the right moment, not an instant too soon, not a second too late. And it takes brains to know just when to cackle.—Atlantic.

The New Way.

Dorothy and Eleanor met one morning out at the country club.

"Does Florence look any different since she and her husband have separated?" asked Dorothy.

"Oh, yes," was the reply. "She wears her hair a la divorce."

"Heavens!" exclaimed Dorothy. "How's that?"

"Why," smiled Eleanor, "parted, of course."—Detroit Free Press.

Story Tellers and Liars.

A chap may be a great story teller when he's out at night with the crowd, but he's only a plain, ordinary, everyday liar, without any originality at that, when he gets home and begins to explain why he stayed out so late.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Outspoken.

Mrs. Garrulous—I was outspoken in my sentiments at the club this afternoon. Her Husband—I can't believe you. Who outspoke you, my dear?—London Mail.

Genial Man.

"Why don't you learn to dance?"

"What's the use?" rejoined Mr. Groucher. "I can get tired without going to all that trouble."—Washington Star.

CONTRARY FORCES.

Problem of a Bullet Fired From the Rear of a Moving Train.

Replying to the question, "Supposing, to use an overdrawn illustration, that a railroad train was going forward at the rate of 100 miles per minute and a gun was fired from the rear of the train in the opposite direction, if the velocity of the bullet as it left the gun would also have been 100 miles per minute had the gun been discharged by a person standing on sound ground, would the bullet leave the gun at all, and if so, at what rate of speed?" Edgar Lucien Larkin in the New York American says:

"The bullet would leave the muzzle of the gun with a speed of 100 miles per minute; the force of the explosive in the gun is the cause of the motion of the bullet, not that of the train. At the exact end of one minute the rear of the train and the bullet would be 200 miles apart. Before the gun is fired the bullet is moving with the train; at time of firing the bullet is at rest during an infinitesimal of time or a differential of time. The time in between the stopping of the motion of the bullet with the train and beginning of motion from the train is mathematically called a consecutive state and is such an important element of human knowledge that the highest branch of mathematics, the differential calculus, only is able to completely explore its wonderful properties."

KAFFIR "BOY" SERVANTS.

They Bathe and Oil Themselves and Then Don Filthy Clothes.

Most of the "domestic" work in South Africa is done by the Kaffirs, who are called "boys," no matter what their age may be.

When the Kaffir boys come from the kraals no one ever uses their native names. As soon as they are brought into contact with the whites they take a "white" name. This produces results not lacking in the elements of humor.

Among the house boys "Knife," "Fork" and "Spoon" are common names. "Table," "Chair," "Carriage," "Watch" and "Matchbox" are others more infrequently used. There is of record one boy who took the utilitarian name of "Ham and Eggs."

The Kaffirs are very fond of rice when they learn to eat it among the whites, and one stable boy thought he had found the finest name in the world in "Rice."

In some respects the Kaffirs are the cleanest people in the world. They are forever scrubbing themselves in hot water and anointing themselves with oil afterward. But the habit does not extend to their clothes. They will take an elaborate bath and then don clothes that never saw the washtub.—Washington Star.

Old Book Advertisement.

The advertising of children's books does not seem to have advanced in ingenuity since the time of old John Newbery. Here is a specimen of his art from the Morning Chronicle in December, 1767: "This day was published 'Nurse Truelove's New Year's Gift, or the Book of Books For Children,' adorned with cuts and designed as a present for every little boy who would become a great man and ride upon a fine horse and to every little girl who would become a great woman and ride in a lord mayor's gilt coach. Printed for the author, who has ordered these books to be given gratis to all little boys and girls at the Bible and Sun in St. Paul's churchyard, they paying for the binding, which is only twopence each book."—London Chronicle.

Strict About Guns.

Any one who handles a gun in Germany is held to more strict accountability than in America. A member of a hunting party in Prussian Saxony asked permission of a comrade to examine his gun. The owner handed it over, and while the man was examining it the gun was discharged, instantly killing a young woman standing near by. The owner of the gun was sentenced to one year's imprisonment, while the man who was handling the gun has to serve only a six months' term. The court held that the owner was criminally negligent in not withdrawing the cartridge. The man who held the weapon was treated more leniently because he was an inexperienced hunter.

No Particular Hurry.

Brown and his wife were at a moving picture show.

In the play on the screen the villain had just thrown the hero from a high cliff.

"Oh," exclaimed Mrs. Brown, "I hope the officers hurry up and catch the wretch!"

"Have patience, dear," said her husband. "The operator is turning the reel as fast as he dares."—Judge.

Borneo's Animal Curiosities.

In Borneo winged creatures are encountered where one would least expect them. Flying fish the size of herrings are found in all the waters, and there is the flying fox, the well known fruit eating bat, which the Malays call "kruang."

Unsympathetic.

"Does Alice bring her troubles to you now as she used to?"

"No; not since I began pointing out to her that she was to blame for having them."—Boston Transcript.

New Modern Dancing.

The leading Expert and Instructor in New York City, writes: "Dear Sir:—I have used ALLEN'S FOOT—EASE, the antiseptic powder to be shaken into the shoes, for the past ten years. It is a blessing to all who are compelled to be on their feet. I dance eight or ten hours daily, and find that ALLEN'S FOOT—EASE, keeps my feet cool, takes the friction from the shoe, prevents corns and Sore, Aching feet. I recommend it to all my pupils."

The rain was right on the job for "clean up week." Its the best old cleaner ever was.

While the Mexican situation occupies the public mind, political candidates of unsavory records slide along as happily as their more godly brethren.

"Go to church Sunday" succeeded in thawing out a lot of mossbacks who had forgotten which way to turn after entering the church door. A diet that helps the patient is a good one to continue.

A cavalry troop having been established in Bellefonte the price of saddle horses in Centre County is not likely to suffer a slump. Judging by the way the prices for cars hold up one would imagine that there was an auto troop in every community.

Huerta may have been in the wrong all these months, but he has been a pretty busy individual for all that. Even should he finally agree to step down and out it will be necessary to furnish him a steamer de luxe and a free trip to some foreign port. Some persons want things their own way, others insist on having them so.

This week a number of men were laid off at the Lock Haven paper mill, owing to a scarcity of orders. A larger number is scheduled to go in the near future unless unlooked for orders are received. At Altoona hundreds of men are out of employment. It is the same story at Harrisburg. Pittsburgh has many thousands of idle men—men who are not working because they have no employment. Philadelphia and New York and Chicago have their many thousands out of employment. Every man out of a job means a home compelled to manage under reduced circumstances. and in lots of instances in privation if not actual distress. Otherwise, the Democratic tariff law might be said to be working entirely satisfactorily. Reminds one of the story about the operation that was a complete success but the patient died.

DAN SICKLES.

General Dan. Sickles has surrendered—his first surrender in a long and stormy life. He succumbed to death at his home in New York on Sunday night. His fight to continue to live could be waged no longer. Old age, together with the weaknesses resulting from physical injuries incurred in war time days, at last paid tribute to the inevitable. The last of the great commanders who fought in the battle of Gettysburg breathed his last amid surroundings more peaceful and comforting than had marked the latter years of his life. Terminating an estrangement that had caused unhappiness and misery in countless ways, his wife was at his bedside when he passed away. They had been reconciled and reunited just a few hours before the death angel breathed a summons to one who was accustomed to giving and not taking commands. Everywhere through the land where there lives a soldier the news of the passing away of General Dan. Sickles occasioned a heart throb. Some of his old command who live in Centre County learned with profound sorrow of his death.

For a decade he was a fighter by profession—all his life he was a fighter by nature. His indomitable fighting spirit remained to the last. Born in New York in 1825, Sickles, at the age of 22 fought the Whigs as a Democrat in the New York Legislature. At 28 he displayed his fighting spirit, as corporation attorney of New York it was he who secured for his city its great Central Park. At this time his military career began as major of the Twelfth Regiment, National Guard of New York, had served as secretary of legation at London under Minister James Buchanan; he had won a state senatorship through a bitter campaign, and he was seated in the Thirty-fifth Congress at Washington.

It was at this time that an event occurred which became the sensation of the day. Sickles had begun his second term as congressman in 1859 when the national capital was stirred by the news that the young representative from New York had shot and killed Philip Barton Key, the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia. Sickles declared that Key had misled Mrs. Sickles, who was Therese Bagioll, daughter of an Italian music teacher. The trial lasted 20 days, ending in the acquittal of Sickles on the ground of "unwritten law." Mrs. Sickles died a few years later.

At the outbreak of the Civil War, the young fighting politician, then 36 years old, went to Lincoln to offer his services.

"Raise your regiments and you shall be brigadier general in command," said the President.

Sickles raised the famous Excelsior Brigade in New York, taking command of one of its regiments as colonel. Lincoln kept his word and in 1861 raised him to brigadier general. On the peninsula and at Antietam he distinguished himself as a soldier and leader. At Chancellorsville he led a division. At Gettysburg he led the Third Corps, lost a leg, and became a national hero. At 37 years of age he had risen from a colonel to major general of volunteers.

After the war his fighting spirit led him into the regular army and he became first, brigadier and then major general. He continued active service until 1869, when he was appointed minister to Spain by President Grant.

At the court of Spain Sickles' vigorous personality made him a dominating figure. Four years of brilliant diplomacy brought him the epithet of "The Yankee King of Spain." Here he contracted his second marriage, with the beautiful and distinguished Senorita Creagh. This romance was to last more than a quarter century.

Returning alone to New York, Gen. Sickles again entered politics. He served as sheriff of New York and at 67 he was re-elected to Congress. Gen. Sickles' life drew to a close with frequent romantic situations. He faced bankruptcy proceedings in his last years, though he had early in life received a large share of his father's $3,000,000 estate, but his estranged wife and son came to his aid on several occasions.

His last days were spent at New York, surrounded by war relics and attended by his faithful negro servant.

Miners Adopt 1912 Scale.

The Philipsburg Journal says: The reports reaching the Daily Journal from various sections indicate that the miners in District 2 have voted by a large majority to adopt the scale of 1912 as a working agreement for two years dating from April 1st. In Cambria county and in the DuBois field, where there was some doubt over the outcome, the vote in favor of the 1912 scale was over-whelming.

The joint scale committee will soon get together to sign the wage agreement, which assures uninterrupted prosperity for the next two years.

Found Two Dead Elk.

While inspecting paper wood near Orviston on Monday, Frank Taylor, superintendent in the woods for the Lock Haven paper mill, came across the carcasses of two dead elk. There was nothing to indicate how they might have come to their death. It is supposed that the elk were a part of the herd kept for a time in a preserve at Beech Creek.

CLOTHESPIN MACHINES.

What Happens When a Log of Wood Starts Through Them.

Making clothespins is an industry that nets handsome returns to many American factories. At Martinsville, Ind., there is a factory which has a capacity of more than 200,000 clothespins a day.

A rough log started through the mill comes out as hundreds of the shapely little wooden pins familiar to the back yard. The logs are cut into blocks about sixteen inches long, which a headlong saw cuts into boards about five-eighths of an inch thick. A gang of saws cuts these boards into strips five-eighths of an inch square and each long enough to make four pins. These strips are placed on an automatic trimmer and cut to the required length. They are then conveyed to the automatic lathes, seven in number, each with a capacity of four dozen a minute. From the lathes the pins drop to the slotting machines and from these to the dryroom, where all moisture is removed. Next they go to the polishing cylinders, which are filled about half full of pins, chips and sawdust. The cylinders revolve slowly for four hours, after which the pins drop into chutes to be conveyed to the packing room. Each lathe has a capacity of 2,400 dozen pins a day.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

OIL UPON THE WATERS.

Its Action In Calming the Billows of a Stormy Sea.

Literally as well as figuratively, to pour oil upon the troubled waters is to calm them to a degree. This has been known from time immemorial, although its scientific explanation is not any too familiar even at the present day. The secret of the phenomenon lies in the fact that oil is extremely viscous—that is to say, it is of a ropy consistency, sticky and adhesive, and can be spread out into a very thin but comparatively strong sheet.

In lubricating a bearing, for instance, it forms a tenuous film between the metals and so protects them from the wear of direct contact with each other.

Oil is lighter than water and when poured upon it remains upon the surface. As the surface tension of water is stronger than that of oil, the oil is immediately drawn out over the water in a very thin body, forming a sort of blanket, which presents a considerable resistance to the motions of the element beneath. The water waves still roll almost as high as before, but they are unable to break into ripples, so that the stormy sea, when oil covered, presents a surface of huge undulations, but smooth ones.

Ships are able to ride such waves with comparative ease. It is the waves that break that present the real danger to the mariner.—Boston Herald.

Silhouette and Painting.

The art of painting begins inevitably with drawing—with expression by means of the point; the result—line. This every teacher and academy realizes and has to realize. More, every great school of painting has evolved from it. But this use of the point or drawing soon reaches its limitations, and the brush demands mass, or perhaps it is more correct to say that mass demands the brush. The floating of masses on to canvas or paper, with its edges holding the outline of the form, is silhouette. Silhouette, in other words, is the basis of all mass impressions. Without a sense of silhouette we can utter no large and sublime moods. Yet, strange to say, the small part given to silhouette in the teaching of the art of painting in academies—indeed, more often the utter lack of it—has always struck me as extraordinary.—Haldane Macfall in T. P.'s Weekly, London.

Receiving Mothers' Pensions.

Checks in payment of the state's half of mothers' pensions for the month of April are being mailed from Harrisburg this week to a list of beneficiaries that has grown largely in the last thirty days. On April 1 the auditor general's department had approved 118 recommendations. At the close of the month the number of approved recommendations was 187.

The Luzerne county board of trustees, of which Mrs. George Galland is chairman, has thought it wise to recommend smaller pensions to a larger number of mothers rather than larger pensions to a more limited number of worthy women. In this way it is using the fund at its command to the best possible advantage. The assistance given is widely distributed, and there is lessening of the danger that the fund may be exhausted before all deserving applicants shall have been placed on the list.

Baby Burned to Death.

Out in the yard of her home at Huntingdon with her 5 year-old brother, Harold, Elsie Kepler, 3-year-old daughter of Charles and Myrtle Kepler, played with matches Sunday afternoon. Her clothing ignited and she was so badly burned that she died in Blair hospital at 10.50 o'clock Monday morning.

The child and her brother had played with matches earlier in the day. Both had received a scolding from their mother but, despite the admonitions, Harold secured more matches. The children were in the rear of the yard, fascinated by the flames, when the tot's clothing became ignited.

She toddled towards her house, calling for her mother, who rushed out and tore the flaming clothing from the child's tender body. The mother sustained bad burns of the hands and arms, while her child was seriously burned about the face, arms and chest.

Harry E. Jenkins, of Tyrone, was a Bellefonte visitor yesterday.

The Missile Mementos

A Story of a War Veteran

By JOHN TURNLEE

When Bert Franklin went out to fight for the Union in the summer of 1861 he was as handsome a young fellow as ever wore a uniform. You wouldn't think to see him now that he could have left half a dozen girls behind him, each of whom supposed she alone possessed his heart, for he is three-quarters of a century old, has hardly enough silver hair on his head to put in a souvenir locket and his face is so covered with wrinkles that it resembles a ball of yarn.

But Bert in 1861 was straight as an arrow, had a superb figure, which showed to great advantage on horseback—he enlisted in the cavalry—and his merry laugh was equaled only by the jingle of his spurs. As to his eyes, he could look more love through one of them than any other man could through two. The girls of that day all had soldier lovers.

And Bert was as brave as he was handsome. In his first fight he was wounded and was made a corporal. In his second he was wounded again and was made a sergeant. In his third he received still another wound and was made a lieutenant. Now, it so happened that the first bullet lodged in the flesh and was cut out by a surgeon. Bert sent it to the girl he loved best, who treasured and revered it. His second wound came from a fragment of a shell, the force of which must have been spent, for the flesh was more bruised than torn. This fragment he sent to another girl he loved best. His third wound was made by a pistol ball while the regiment was charging. It went clear through the calf of his leg, so he did not secure it, but he sent one like it to a third girl he loved best as the original ball that had made a hole through him.

Bert steadily rose from private to captain and was constantly getting wounded. The consequence was that before the war ended no fewer than five girls possessed missiles that had pierced him in battle, and each girl thought that she alone possessed the only one that had been preserved. Shortly before the surrender at Appomattox the hero was so badly wounded that he was mustered out of service and after lying several months in a Washington hospital went home to limp about, an interesting character. Women passing him in the street would exclaim loud enough for him to hear, "Poor fellow!" "Noble soldier!" "What a pity!" and such other encomiums as were pleasing to the ear of the man referred to.

The pity was that this noble defender of the Union had been so dishonorable as to send missiles with which he had been wounded to a number of girls, leaving each to suppose that she alone had been favored by the receipt of the only original lead or iron that had nearly bereft her of the handsome Bert. But his conduct only goes to prove that physical bravery is a very different quality from moral bravery and that war heroes are no more to be trusted by women than any other man.

Another feature of this case is disappointing. Bert, by sending so many bullets, fragments of shells and other articles used in war to kill persons to so many different girls, showed plainly that something was wanting in his makeup. For there was great danger that some of these young ladies would learn that other young ladies possessed the only real, true, original bullet that had nearly bereft the world, his country and the girl he loved best of Captain Bert Franklin, and should the secret get out there would be a more terrific stinging than occurred in the "Hornets' Nest" at Shiloh.

And this leads us to an inference—pessimistic, I admit—that physical bravery may after all be a want of appreciation of danger. Was not Captain Franklin's bravery in battle due to the same defect that led him to send the original bullet that wounded him to five different girls? In the one case he was liable to lose his life, in the other to bring down upon himself the contempt, to say nothing of the wrath, of these young ladies.

But this is not an essay on moral versus physical bravery. It is a simple story of a man who, having achieved honors in war, came home a hero a short time after his acts of heroism at the front to incur the scorn of those who had most honored him. There was something sacred in each of these missiles he had sent to his best girl that led her to treasure it in secret. It was not till the hero was at the height of his glory—that is, when he was walking about at home on crutches, pale and thin—that the secret of the many mementos of his sufferings and tokens of his love got out. Then one morning the postman left for him a little pasteboard box that had once contained a gem, and on opening it he took out one of the many missiles that had wounded him. No word came with it as to why it was returned to him, but for the first time in his life he felt a sinking about the heart. He recognized the writing in which the box was addressed as that of the young lady he especially admired.

When the next delivery of mail was made Captain Franklin was handed another box, this time a wooden one, such as opticians use for mailing glasses. Opening it, he took out a piece of iron that had been sent from a bursting shell. The fragment was large enough and heavy enough had it hit the captain to have torn a hole in him big enough to admit a cheese box. This one of the many mementos he had sent out was also returned without explanation.

Franklin on receiving the first missile had laid it on the mantel. He now placed the second beside it. When the postman came again he brought two boxes, each containing a piece of lead which had been sent from the barrel of some kind of gun. Neither these returns was commented on by the sender. Franklin, who had faced them bravely in battle, now received them with every indication of fear. He remembered the storm in which they had come to him and wished that he were back in it rather than in his present position. He laid them beside the others on the mantel with a trembling hand.

Every memento he had sent out was now returned to him except one. A bullet had struck the metallic clasp of his sword belt and been flattened by the impact. He had shaped it with his pocketknife into the form of a heart and sent it to the fifth girl he loved best, Miss Alice Farnsworth, writing her how his clasp had saved his life. Alice pierced a hole in it and wore it on a gold chain about her neck.

Bert did not know of the reception of his gift, but he wondered if it, too, would come back to him. He fully expected to receive it by the next delivery. He moved the four missiles on the mantel, stretching them along from end to end, leaving a place in the center for the leaden heart when it should come.

The next time Captain Franklin went out on the street, hobbling on his crutches, he met one of the girls he had loved best and to whom he had sent a bullet. She cut him dead. The same day he met another of these young ladies and received the same treatment. Within a week every one of the four who had returned his mementos had had an opportunity to show her displeasure, passing him with her head in the air.

"Where," moaned the transgressor, "are the encomiums these girls bestowed on me? 'My hero,' 'Noble defender of your country,' 'Poor fellow,' 'Sufferer for the cause.'"

These expressions, denoting the sympathy, the admiration of these young ladies, came up to mock him. We are seldom conscious of our strong points, and the captain, never having appreciated his deeds of daring, would now have exchanged them all for a nod from one of these girls who were displaying their contempt for him.

One day when he was wishing that some one of the various implements of war he had sent north had killed him he met Alice Farnsworth face to face.

She smiled at him.

That smile was a healing balm to his distressed spirit.

"How happens it that you deign to notice so unworthy a person as I?" he asked.

"Come with me and I will tell you."

She took him to her home and when they were alone together, seizing a gold chain about her neck, drew forth the heart shaped bullet.

"The secret that you had sent these mementos to all of the girls became known by comparing notes soon after your return. All were furious except myself, my own conscience in such matters not being clear as crystal. It was suggested by one of our number that we send back your mementos and cut you when we met you. I found an excuse for not joining in your punishment—a poor excuse, I admit—in the fact that while each of the others received a missile that had drawn your blood I had been sent one that had done you no injury whatever. I, therefore, declined to participate in their plan."

This is the end of the story so far as the old vet tells it today, but not only the flattened heart shaped bullet, but the four other souvenirs, have been in the possession of Alice, his wife, ever since the memorable day he learned that she had stood by him in his degradation. She admits that there was, even after her refusal to join the cabal against him, a coolness toward her on their part, but she has managed to bear it, since she has got more true affection from her husband than she has lost from the girls.

DEFECTIVE EYESIGHT

How It Helped the Lovers

By RYLAND BELL

"Old Grif" we called him, and on the surface the name fitted him admirably. He was Lieutenant Colonel Charles L. Griffin of the United States artillery and commanded the seacoast fort at which I was stationed. He didn't look like a griffin at all. He got the name from the fact that he was a strict disciplinarian and when on duty gave his orders in a sharp and rasping tone.

I was in love with his daughter, May, who really commanded, because, while her father ordered the rest of us about, his daughter had him completely under her thumb. His eyesight was defective, and this rendered him liable to make mistakes. Across the parade he couldn't tell a gun carriage from an ambulance, and he was constantly mistaking one person for another.

One morning Ned Perkins, a junior officer like myself, came to me looking as if he were getting ready for a funeral.

"What's the matter, old man?" I asked.

"Matter! Matter enough. Jennie Trewbridge is at Atlantic City for the week end. I wish to join her there, and Old Grif won't give me leave."

"HOW DO YOU DO, MR. PERKINS?" SHE EXCLAIMED.

"Why not?"

"He says that all the leaves that can be granted just now have been given."

Ned didn't tell me just why he was so anxious to go to see Miss Trowbridge, but he had confided enough before to enable me to infer the cause correctly. He was on the ragged edge with the young lady, while she was on the ragged edge between him and another fel to accept. Ned hoped that if he could get to Atlantic City while she was there he could clinch the matter. If not he believed that the other man would in time get the girl. A civilian does not necessarily have to ask permission to go where he likes, but a soldier is on or off duty under the orders of a superior. If Perkins could have told the colonel the circumstances doubtless he would have got his leave. But how could he take his commanding officer into his confidence as to a love affair?

"Ned," I said, "are you in for any special duty for the next two days?"

"Yes, gun instruction."

"I wonder if I couldn't pass muster as you. We don't look much alike, but we're about the same height and build."

"It would necessitate your shaving off your mustache. I couldn't raise one at once."

"I would do that for you."

"But your hair is a molasses candy color, while mine is black as ink."

"Thank you for the compliment. I could dye my hair or rub some black pomade on it, which would do as well."

"Your scheme is a good one, but, gee willikins, suppose the colonel recognizes you as personating me!"

"He won't."

"No one will give me away. I'll risk that. But if Griffin should know that I have deliberately absented myself, not only without permission, but in spite of having been refused leave, he'll prefer charges, there'll be a court martial, and my army career will be blighted."

"Nothing risked, nothing gained. You are a soldier without fortune. Miss Trowbridge would make a good wife for an army officer, for she has means, and no soldier should marry a poor woman to bring up a family on the small pay we get. You go to Atlantic City, and if you get the girl you can stand being caught at absence without leave. Besides, the risk you are taking will be a trump card with the girl."

"I believe you're right," said Ned thoughtfully, "but if you are caught personating me what is to prevent trouble for you?"

"Oh, I'm safe enough. No court would convict me of a misdemeanor in helping a brother officer. Besides"—

"Besides what?"

I didn't enlighten him, but what I had in mind was that the colonel would not proceed against me without his daughter's permission, and I knew he would never get it.

That evening Perkins took a train for Atlantic City, and I shaved off my mustache, also making my hair a dull black. The next morning I was out on the parapet superintending the instruction of squads in handling the guns, when the colonel came along. He was showing the fort to some relatives who were staying at one of the hotels outside the walls. He came up to where I was standing near a gun and began to explain its workings to his friends. Presently he asked of me:

"Have these men been long under instruction, Mr."—

"Perkins. Yes, sir; they are becoming quite proficient."

The colonel stood not a dozen feet away from me. The look he gave me was, to say the least, searching. But I kept a stiff upper lip, and without noticing it walked away to another gun and began giving the sergeant in charge orders. The colonel passed on with his visitors, but I knew that he had noticed something about me that did not look like Perkins.

Before the time for gun instruction thinking it possible that the colonel would send for him in order to get a closer inspection of him. I had scarcely arrived when there was a rap at the door, and there stood the colonel's orderly.

"The commander desires Lieutenant Perkins to report at the headquarters office," said the orderly, saluting.

"Very well," I replied, and the orderly withdrew.

I should have notified May of the game I had to play, so that if occasion required I might secure her assistance. I had called upon her, but she was dining out, and I did not see her. On my way to the colonel's office I passed his quarters and found her sitting on the porch. I joined her and told her of the critical position both of myself and of Perkins.

"Do you think your conscience would permit you to vouch for me?" I asked her.

"My conscience will permit a white lie if I can thereby benefit a friend," was the reply.

"Very well; I would suggest that you go to your father's office and be ready when I enter to make him believe I am Mr. Perkins."

She left me to put on a hat and when she came back took the walk leading to the office. I waited till I saw her enter, then followed her. When I reported to the colonel he had his pocketbook in his hand getting out some bills, which he gave to her. On seeing me she exclaimed:

"How do you do, Mr. Perkins? Where have you kept yourself for so long? You have not been to see me in an age."

It was plainly evident from the way the colonel blinked at me that he had sent for me to find out if I were the officer he had seen on the parapet. Evidently I did not look to him like Perkins, and I must have looked very like myself. But he could not trust his own eyesight and dared not issue with his daughter as to my identity. Finally he looked an order to her to proceed on her way, but she declined to leave me unprotected and, resuming her seat, indicated that she would remain until her father had transacted his buiness with me. He had nothing of importance to communicate, and after giving me some improvised instructions as to points he desired the men instructed in concerning the guns he dismissed me.

I walked in the direction May would take on leaving the office and when she came out joined her, curious to know what if anything concerning me had passed between her and her father after my departure. She told me that he had seemed to be thinking of my resemblance to myself instead of to Perkins, but that to question her would be to confess that his eyesight was failing and he could not bring himself to do so.

Fearing that I might be required to pass a second examination I invited May to an excursion up the river that would keep me away for the rest of the day. I had no right thus to absent myself, but if the matter were raised, having been ministering to the pleasure of the commander's daughter, I felt assured that no notice would be taken of the breach of discipline.

May was good enough to remain away with me till the brightness of day had passed, and her father could not see in the dark. I thought that, since I was aiding my friend Perkins to propose for a wife, I might do something for myself in a like direction and during the day I told May "my pending between us for some time. I was not surprised at an acceptance.

Perkins waked me up before reveille the next morning to tell me that he had left Atlantic City and Miss Trowbridge long after midnight, having proposed and been accepted during the evening. He expressed deep gratitude for my efforts in his behalf, since the Trowbridge family, including Miss Jennie, were booked to sail in a few days on a six months' trip to Europe, and Ned's rival had engaged passage on the same steamer. Ned was confident that without my and May Griffin's valuable assistance he would have lost his sweetheart.

Soon after guard mount the colonel sent for Ned, who responded to the summons in propria persona. He told me that his commander looked at him with a puzzled expression, then, satisfied that he was himself, gave him an unimportant order.

The result of this single day's performance was a double wedding that occurred the next winter, in which May and I and Jennie and Ned figured as leading ladies and gentlemen.

OUTER SPACE.

Showing How Far It Is From Being Empty of Matter.

"When we speak of outer space, the space between star and star, as being empty of matter, it is rather interesting to see exactly what we mean," says a writer. "We know from observations on the planets that light, in its passage across space to our earth, suffers hardly any absorption, and from this fact we can deduce conclusions respecting the density of such matter as exists in outer space.

"If the degree of rarefaction in outer space is, for example, in the neighborhood of the one hundred millionth part of an atmosphere, then the appearance of Jupiter, for instance, would be as if our atmosphere had twice its present opacity. So that such matter as exists must be in a much more rarefied state. But, after all, these terms are only comparative.

"Suppose our atmosphere were allowed to expand up to the limits of the visible universe as far as the Milky way. Then its rarefaction would be such that it would be quite impossible, by any optical means, to detect the presence of any matter. Nevertheless, there would be about 5,000 molecules per cubic centimeter throughout space."

Politics in France.

Americans generally know as little about French politics as Frenchmen know about ours. Issues, methods and parties in the two countries are radically different. In France parties are so many in number and so small in membership that they are usually designated as groups rather than as parties. It is always necessary to combine the forces of three or more of them to constitute a majority in the chamber of deputies, and that can be done only by giving each group a representation in the cabinet. The parliamentary system of France resembles that of Great Britain in this: When the chamber gives a vote adverse to the ministry, the ministry resigns. But that means only that a new alliance is formed that includes groups other than those represented in the retiring ministry. As a consequence it usually happens that some members of the defeated cabinet are retained in the cabinet that succeeds it.—Youth's Companion.

ANIMAL SPIRITS.

Our Vital Functions as They Were Known In Galen's Time.

"Few persons even stop to consider when they speak of 'a man of spirit' that they are unwittingly employing the language of the days of Galen," says the Journal of the American Medical Association. "Yet this is evidently the survival of the old doctrine of spirits. We may believe that Galen had a conception of the nerve trunks as conductors of something—he called it spirits—to and from the brain and spinal cord.

"The natural spirits were that undefined property which gave to blood the capacity of nourishing the tissues of the body. The vital spirits were acquired in the heart, and when at last the blood with its vital spirits went to the brain and experienced a sort of refinement for the last time the animal spirits were separated from it and carried to the body by the nerve trunks."

Such was the idea of the vital functions in the second century. Today, after 1,800 years, we know that there are no "spirits" in our blood or nerves, but we still speak of being in "high spirits" or "low spirits," of being full of "animal spirits," of a "spirited answer" or a "spirited horse."

The Duke and the Artist.

In "Random Recollections" is this story of the Duke of Connaught. The incident happened at Windsor castle. The duke was criticising a water color done by R. Caton Woodville, representing a drummer in the guards:

"Look here, Mr. Woodville," he said, "you have made a mistake in the mounting of the braiding on this drummer's coat; the fringe on the side of the chest ought to run in this direction," indicating the line. "I am certain of it, for as a boy I wore the uniform, but I will show you what I mean," and, turning to his A. D. C., he asked him to have the bugler of the castle guard sent up. The bugler came, and the duke, turning toward him, said, "Now, Mr. Woodville, I will show you what I mean." And then, as he looked critically at the boy's uniform, he exclaimed, "By Jove, Mr. Woodville, you are right, after all!"

Justifying His Expense.

Managers who have to pass on expense accounts will appreciate David Gibson's story about a Chicago salesman who paid $8 excess fare to reach New York on a fast train.

"What time did you arrive in New York?" asked the employer.

"Nine-forty in the morning."

"What did you do when you got in?"

"Went up to the hotel, took a bath and ate breakfast."

"What time did you see your man?" asked the conservator.

"About 3 in the afternoon," said the salesman.

"Yes, but why have you got $8 charged up for excess fare on the limited when you could just as well have taken a regular train?"

"Well," said the salesman, "it looked better to be on that train."—New York World.

Safe Offer.

"Your Scotch friend asked you to have a cigar, but I notice he didn't offer me one."

"Ah, you see he knows I don't smoke."—London Tattler.

It is not the strength but the duration of great sentiments that makes great men.—Friedrich Nietzsche.

No Wonder the Shade of Sir Isaac Newton Was Disgusted.

Augustine Birrell, author and statesman, at a newspaper men's dinner told a unique ghost story.

"I have been haunted ever since I was almost a boy," he said, "by the constant repetition of one and the same dream. It comes to me again and again. It is this: I dream I am walking about somewhere in some plain or desert, and I suddenly encounter the agitated ghost of Sir Isaac Newton. He approaches me, his eyes almost starting out of his head; he tells me who he is and how 'gnorant he is of all that has happened in the world of science since he left.

"'Now,' he says, 'I want you to tell me in a few words, for I have only a quarter of an hour left, all that has happened to the race—the progress. How is it? I know what it was when I left it. What is it now? My heart sinks, and, covered with confusion, I stumble, I stutter, I stammer. I become more and more involved, my ignorance becomes more and more apparent, and at last the unhappy ghost, throwing up his hands, leaves me with dismay.

"That dream constantly comes to me. The only difference is that the moment the unhappy Sir Isaac Newton sees me now he says, 'Oh, that old ignoramus!' and departs."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Treeless Falkland Islands.

There are no trees in the Falkland islands, consequently the country presents a bleak appearance. In the autumn the long grass, turning somewhat grayish, imparts a disagreeable and monotonous aspect to the hillside. On the return of spring the ranchers used to have a glorious time of it in literally setting the camp on fire. This was done by simply striking a match on the saddle pommel and casting it into the midst of the withered grass. No coaxing was needed, as the material was withered and dry as tinder. Presently the mountain side would be fringed with one long line of raging flames and curling smoke. Thus was the pasture renewed. Although no trees grow in these islands, there is ample evidence of the land having once been thickly wooded.—Chambers' Journal.

Old Dances In Old Times.

In Edward Scott's "Dancing In All Ages" are some curious details about the dances of old England.

"Joan Sanderson" was a "jolly dance" in Mr. Scott's definition, for before it was ended each lady had kissed all the gentlemen twice, and each man had been equally enterprising. Mary Stuart danced the "Volta," though "not so high and so disposedly" as Elizabeth. In King Charles' time people danced "Trenchmore," the "Cushion Dance," "Omnium Gatherum" and "Holte cum Tolte."

"All In a Garden Green," "Gathering of Peascods," "Lumps of Pudding," "Under and Over," "The Bath," "The Slaughter House" and "Have at Thy Coat, Old Woman," are dances not quite so old.

Played a Dual Role.

"Now," said a newly made husban "I am your captain, and you must let me command you through life."

"You have a dual capacity," replied the former widow, "because you are my captain and my second mate also."—London Telegraph.

Potifer's Interference

It Found a Job For Him

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"No luck today," reported Henry Potifer smilingly as he entered his home after another day's unsuccessful search for a position.

Ellen Potifer was putting supper on the table.

She was a tall, thin, sallow woman, who faced the world with an expression of perpetual melancholy.

"I don't know what we will do!" she groaned, sitting down and pouring out a cup of strong tea for herself. "There is just $100 left in the bank, and when that is gone where will we be?"

"Right here, as usual," responded Henry Potifer cheerfully as he helped his wife to a spoonful of corned beef hash. "That $100 will keep the wolf at bay for six months if your economical hand is at the helm, my dear," he went on, mixing his metaphors while he consumed hot biscuits and hash with an excellent appetite, "but happily it will not be required to last that long. I feel sure that I shall find a job tomorrow."

"You've felt that way ever since Mixon & Co. discharged you three weeks ago," retorted Mrs. Potifer, refusing to have her gloom pierced by a ray of hope. "That makes four perfectly good positions you've lost simply because you can't attend to your own business and let other people's affairs alone."

"Miranda," he said chokingly, "please understand that when I go out to look for a job tomorrow morning I shall not return until I get one. No, ma'am, not if I'm gone 500 years!"

"Henry!"

"Yes, you can 'Henry' me, and you can henpeck me, too!" went on the angry Potifer. "You women get together and ask, 'Why do girls leave home?' I don't know, but I can tell you why half the men leave home. It's because they're nagged there!"

Whereupon Mr. Potifer left his supper unfinished and slapped on his hat and slammed the front door and went downtown and enjoyed a moving picture show.

"I INTEND TO SPOIL IT," ROARED HENRY POTIFER.

Mrs. Potifer washed the dishes and dripped tears into the dishpan and then sat down and wrote a long, complaining letter to her married daughter by her first husband.

The next morning when Mr. Potifer awoke it was with a vague sense of some impending calamity. Presently he recollected his rash threat of the night before. He jumped out of bed and dressed carefully.

So when Henry Potifer appeared, well brushed and shining from his morning toilet, he carried a suit case and an umbrella.

Mrs. Potifer, who had been making waffles for breakfast as a sort of peace offering to her husband, poked her head into the dining room, saw the suit case and fell to weeping noisily.

"I never thought I'd be deserted by my husband," she moaned. "Now, Augustus Hakle, my first husband, was devoted to me and"—

Mr. Potifer put up his hand with a new, commanding gesture. He was enjoying the scene. He felt like an actor on the stage. He believed he would have made an excellent actor.

"Miranda," he said kindly, "your first husband did desert you when he died. I am not ready to die yet, but I'm not coming back until I get some kind of a job. If I find one today I'll be home tonight. If I don't come there's money enough to keep you until I do return. I may—I have thought of going on the stage," he ended with a dramatic gesture.

"An actor, Henry?" gasped Mrs. Potifer. "Well, you needn't come back at all, then!"

"So be it, Miranda," returned Mr. Potifer sadly. "I will take my leave. I will breakfast at a dairy lunch downtown. Farewell, farewell, cruel Miranda!" He felt very tragic as he waved an adieu, cocked his hat rakishly over one ear, picked up his bag and umbrella and left the house.

Going downtown in the car his spirits lifted wonderfully. He felt as if he were on the eve of some adventure.

Leaving his bag and umbrella in the check room of a hotel, Henry Potifer ate his breakfast and then set forth to look for a job. He had scanned the morning paper while he ate and there were several places where he might apply for a position as bookkeeper.

At 4 o'clock that afternoon Mr. Potifer acknowledged to himself that it was useless to look further that day. He had been too late or too old or too something for every job that he applied for that day, and late afternoon found him wondering whether he should brave Mrs. Potifer's ridicule and go home in spite of his threats of the morning or whether he should really remain downtown and stay at the hotel until another day promised better luck.

He decided to take a trolley ride, and while he cooled off from the heat of the day's exertions he could decide what to do.

The trolley car whirled him into the green country and through pretty villages. At the end of the line he got off and went for a walk along a babbling brook that reminded him of his boyhood days on the farm.

And on the banks of the brook Mr. Potifer found adventure waiting for him and a steady job lurking in the background, although he didn't know that until afterward.

A pretty girl in a pink sunbonnet was struggling with a tall, dark, villainous looking man, who held her slender hands in his big ones.

"Unhand me, villain!" shrieked the girl just as Mr. Potifer came running upon the scene, his heavy gold headed cane poised for action.

"Never!" cried the man angrily as he dragged her toward the path that led across an open field, beyond which appeared the red roof of a farmhouse. "What are you doing here, old Buttinsky?" he roared at Henry Potifer. "Get out of the way. You're spoiling this."

"I intend to spoil it," roared Henry Potifer valiantly. "Let the lady go, you rascal."

The lady laughed hysterically, the villain swore lustily as Mr. Potifer's cane circled around the man's head and finally fell on his shoulders.

Suddenly the man grasped the girl's hand and shouted:

"Beat it and leave the old meddler behind. We'll get the sack for this."

Whereupon the couple flew along the path into the field and across the field, with Mr. Henry Potifer in hot pursuit, his gray coattails flying, his fat face dripping with perspiration and his mouth wide open like a gasping fish's.

And there fell into the pursuit from behind trees and an ancient barn several policemen, who waved their sticks and fired revolvers into the air.

Mr. Potifer stopped at the first pistol shot just as a bee winging homeward grazed his bald head. Mr. Potifer thought that he had stopped a bullet with his cranium, and he fell to earth and groaned.

Immediately there was a circle of oddly dressed people around him, most of them laughing, some of them scolding, but all of them most concerned in the appearance of a dapper little man who almost danced up and down as he surveyed the recumbent form of Henry Potifer, professional meddler.

"I'd like to kill him!" roared the little man, brandishing his fist before Mr. Potifer's startled eyes. "Man, you've spoiled fifty feet of film!"

"Film?" echoed Mr. Potifer blankly.

"Yes, film!" mimicked the little man, and then he proceeded to explain to Mr. Potifer that he had interfered in the making of a moving picture film—that it would cost hundreds of dollars to make good the damage he had done that afternoon.

Mr. Potifer listened and stared and looked aghast, and with each change of expression the actresses giggled and the men smiled until the manager of the company smiled too. The star whispered for awhile in the manager's ear, and the manager slapped his knee and cried:

"I believe you're right, Barton. I'll talk to the old duffer."

So he smiled upon the perturbed Mr. Potifer and took him aside and made him a proposition.

The proposition almost took Henry Potifer's breath away.

He was to enact the part of the fat uncle in the play. Just be himself, a professional meddler, and it would be all right. And there was a job of keeping the books of the stock company, which Mr. Potifer could have on the side if he wanted it. The manager was sure that there were other plays where Mr. Potifer could just be himself and get away with the part.

So Mr. Potifer accepted the position with becoming gravity, made an appointment to come the next morning and repeat his involuntary entrance into the scene by the brookside and go cavorting over the turf after the lady and the villain while the police brought up the rear.

He arrived at home at 10 o'clock that evening. Mrs. Potifer hardly knew him. He wore trousers and coat of a large check pattern, a pale gray derby hat and white spats.

But she was so glad to see him that she threw her arms around his neck and hugged him tenderly. "No matter about the job, Henry," she assured him when he would have spoken; "I'm so glad to see you again!"

"What if I tell you that I have a position as an actor?" asked Mr. Potifer, thrusting a hand in his breast and striking a dramatic attitude.

"I don't care what it is," cried Miranda warmly, "so long as it brings you back to me!"

THE RULING PASSION.

Saving His Own Life Was a Strictly Business Proposition.

In the Wide World Magazine Malcolm Savage Treacher tells the story of a German mountain climber who did not forget to be economical even in the midst of deadly peril.

A party was crossing a glacier on the slope of Mont Blanc when one of the travelers called to the others to stop and listen. Strange cries came from the ice beneath their feet.

"Some one has fallen into a crevasse!" exclaimed one of the party. "His groans seem to indicate that he is already beyond help."

"We must do what we can in any case," responded one of the guides, and he began a long and perilous descent into what proved to be the bosom of a concealed crevasse. At the bottom they found the poor gentleman who had fallen. He was, however, quite unhurt, sitting comfortably upon a bench of ice.

"We've come to save you," said one of the guides.

"You save me?" answered the gentleman quite tranquilly. "How do you know I want to be saved?"

"Because you called to us for aid," said one of the bewildered guides.

"Perhaps I did," replied the German, "perhaps I didn't. You came anyhow. Now, what'll you take to rescue me?"

And before he would allow the guides to hitch him to the rope and drag him to the surface he compelled them to set down in writing the exact amount they would require for the performance of their life saving duty. He was a business man, whatever any one could say against him, and, moreover, he knew the guides of Switzerland.

SENSES OF PLANTS.

A Theory That Flowers See and Hear and May Even Talk.

Jean Viaud-Bruant, who is one of the most famous French horticulturists, has just published a little book on flowers, in which he advances the theory (I believe it is not entirely novel) that flowers both see and hear. As a young man, he says, he began to study flowers, for which he has always had a passion, and he sought to understand the habits of the blooms which he cultivated. When he saw the growing plant reach out toward the necessary support he asked himself whether the action was the result of volition and whether the plant had eyes.

M. Viaud-Bruant is now apparently convinced that flowers both hear and see. There are some that are sensitive to anaesthetic substances, ether in particular, which suggests the existence of a nervous system, like that of a nervous woman. And he would even credit them with something analogous to the power of speech.

"One knows," he writes, "that the perfume of flowers is a manifestation of vegetable life, a living radiation. Perfume is as much a vibration as an olfactory sensation. The perfume is the voice of the flower. A bouquet is a wordless romance. Each perfume or, rather, each odorous sensation corresponds with a certain rate of vibration. There is an analogy between the perceptions of sound, light and scent. The strong scent corresponds with the deep notes, while the delicate odors correspond with the shrill notes."—Paris Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer.

Not a Very Big Bluff.

There is a story of a man from out of town who came to New York and fell not among thieves, but liars. He listened to the tales of those who haled him about the city, and they came at last to Spuyten Duyvil. The Palisades were pointed out to him, and he heard that the Hudson river scenery was the most beautiful in the world. He turned away and was not impressed.

"But," they remonstrated, "those bluffs of the Palisades are 800 feet high!"

"Well," he returned sadly, "I've learned to know that that isn't a very big bluff in New York."

The story does not go on from there, but it ought to add, as if it were a moral, that that man knew New York very well for a stranger.—New York Post.

Upon the Road.

Perhaps one of the best known puns is that put into the mouth of John Gilpin by Cowper. It will be remembered that, according to the poem, John Gilpin borrowed a horse from his friend to ride to Edmonton to celebrate his wedding day, but the horse had other plans and took the jovial Gilpin to the house of his friend, who, on seeing his ruffled condition, asked him why he had come. Gilpin replied:

I came because your horse would come,
And if I well forbode
My hat and wig will soon be here—
They are upon the road.

Miss Margaret Bullock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Forrest L. Bullock, departed on Saturday for Wernersville, where she will take a course in massaging in the sanitarium at that place. She was accompanied as far as Harrisburg by her sister, Miss Harriett Bullock, who visited there over Sunday and returned home on Monday.

Misses Bessie and Mary Sommerville, of Winburne, who have been spending the past six months in North Africa and Italy, returned home last week. The trip was not only highly enjoyable and of great value from an educational point of view, but also of marked benefit physically.

Robert Thompson, one of the staff at the Beezer garage, knocked off work long enough the other morning to walk down the creek nearby the Central R. R. Co. of Pa. passenger station and haul out an 18-inch trout. A number of anglers had been after the big fellow ever since the opening day of the season, but young Thompson proved to be the boy with the lucky hook and line.

Miss Elizabeth M. Blanchard departed on Tuesday for Bryn Mawr, where she will attend the annual May Day exercises. Prior to her departure announcement was made of her engagement to Rev. R. M. Beach. It is understood that the wedding will be in June. Mr. Beach has been for several years an instructor at the Bellefonte Academy. An interesting coincidence is that Rev. S. W. Beach, of Princeton, New Jersey, who officiated at the recent White House wedding, was an instructor at the Bellefonte Academy some years ago and while here was married to Miss Nellie Orbinson, a cousin of Miss Blanchard.

Last Saturday the Bellefonte High School baseball team defeated the Lock Haven High School nine, 11--7 on the local field. The Bellefonte boys had their batting togs on and whaled the ball in all directions, cleaning up something like sixteen hits. William Gilligan pulled off a three-bagger, Deitrick had three two-baggers, and Lowry got away with one. There were numerous singles. Hartswick pitched the first eight innings for Bellefonte High, Shull relieving him in the ninth. Smith put up a good game behind the bat. The High School boys have an exceptionally good team this year and are banking on a margin of victories. Coach Gilligan is confident the season will be one of the most succesful in years. Next Saturday High School will play State College High, at State College.

In his morning sermon last Sunday, Rev. John Hewitt announced that he would terminate his pastorate of St. John's Protestant Episcopal church in Bellefonte on May 15th. On that date he will go to Sunbury to fill a summer engagement for the Protestant Episcopal parish of that place. Originally it was Mr. Hewitt's intention to continue his pastoral duties in Bellefonte until June 1st, and his letter of resignation, which was sent to the vestry on April 17th, so stated. Subsequently, however, he learned that it would be necessary to leave Bellefonte on May 15th. The numerous friends of Mr. Hewitt very sincerely regret that he is to leave Bellefonte and just as sincerely hope that he will find everything to contribute to his happiness and enjoyment in his new home, wherever it may happen to be. Mrs. Hewitt probably will remain in Bellefonte for a number of weeks.

Mrs. Ogden Malin, of Altoona, nee Miss Helen Hurley of Bellefonte, while on a visit to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Hurley, at Jersey Shore, was stricken with appendicitis and was removed to the hospital there, where she underwent an operation. She is getting along very nicely.

Of course you have or had a mother! Of course she seems to you the noblest person next to God. Sunday next is "Mother's Day." will you wear a carnation in mother's honor, and worship her God? At the Presbyterian church Dr. Hawes will speak on "The Lady Elect and Her Children." You will want to hear this sermon. Service at 10:30.

Rev. James P. Hughes drifted into "The Republican" office a day or two ago, and after seating himself in a chair said: "I was reading the other day about a Judge down in Georgia. He tried something new and it worked to perfection. When men were brought before him on the charge of being drunk he didn't send them to jail and have their families starve meanwhile. He sentenced them to remain at work during the week and go to church every Sunday for a certain number of Sundays. There were ten drunks brought before him and of this number eight made good. Now if that little scheme works so successfully down in Georgia why wouldn't it be worth trying up here in Bellefonte?"

The Academy baseball team defeated the Lafayette High School team, from Buffalo, New York, last Friday on the new Hughes field, on East Bishop Street. The locals were kept pretty busy until the seventh inning when they developed a batting streak and poled five runs over the plate, the final score being 7—2. Kennedy went into the box for the Academy after the first inning. The visitors put up a good, snappy game, and barring the seventh matters were considerably in doubt all through the contest. It was the first game to be played on the new field and visitors were afforded an opportunity to observe the wonderful improvements made in the last few weeks. On Saturday the Academy went to Altoona and lost out to the Phoenix Club, 12—8. Tomorrow the two teams play here, on the new field. Admission 25c. A close game is expected.

The Board of Managers of the Bellefonte Cemetery Association, of which John P. Harris was president, with Miss Olive Mitchell as secretary and treasurer, held their meeting at the Bellefonte Trust Company on Saturday afternoon, last, at which the following members of the board were present: John P. Harris, William P. Humes, David F. Fortney, Charles F. Cook and Clement Dale. Owing to the death of the late General Beaver, who had been a member of the board for a number of years, and the resignations of John P. Harris, William P. Humes and D. F. Fortney, the following changes and additions were made in the management of the association: Clement Dale, president; Charles Cook, Thomas Beaver, J. Linn Harris, D. Paul Fortney, James C. Furst, Joseph L. Montgomery, Henry S. Linn, Dr. R. G. H. Hayes, Miss Mary Meek and Mrs. Harry Keller, as a Board of Managers, with Miss Olive Mitchell as secretary and treasurer, and George W. Port as superintendent. After the report of the secretary was read, and approved, and other business transacted, the board adjourned to meet the first Monday in June, next.

Mrs. Nora Shelden entertained with a luncheon last Friday at the Bush House.

James A. Decker, of Pine Grove Mills, was a visitor in town several days this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip D. Foster, of State College, were visitors in town on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Mac Heinle have moved into apartments over Krumrine's drug store.

Miss Virginia Dale departed on Tuesday for New York, where she is visiting with Mrs. McGargle.

Miss Anna Spangler, of New York, is visiting her grandmother, Mrs. McCullough, on Bishop Street.

Tomorrow's baseball game between the Academy and Altoona will be called at 2 o'clock sharp. Keep this in mind.

Hassel Montgomery and Robert Walker attended a dance at Sweetbriar College during the early part of the week.

Rev. Walter Traub, of State College, underwent an operation Tuesday morning at the State hospital at Mountain Springs.

Placards have been posted about town calling attention to the candidacy of Harry B. Scott, of Philipsburg, for the Republican nomination for the Assembly.

Mrs. Harry Cox and son, Robert, who have been visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sechler, parents of Mrs. Cox, departed last Friday for their home in Franklin.

Mrs. Childs and her younger child will arrive in Bellefonte tomorrow to visit with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. John P. Harris. Her son, Harris, has been here with his grandparents for the last few weeks.

Yardmaster Joe Kelleher, one of the right hand men for the Pennsylvania Railroad, is taking his annual two weeks vacation, although not enjoying it particularly, for he is laid up with a bad cold.

Toward the latter part of the month Judge and Mrs. Ellis L. Orvis will take apartments at the Bush House for the summer. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Harvey and children will remain at the Orvis home. Mr. Harvey will continue in his present business capacity at Snow Shoe, coming to Bellefonte for the week-end.

In another column of "The Republican" appears the formal announcement of Dr. Samuel J. Miller, of Madera, Clearfield County, who is an aspirant for the Republican nomination for State Senator in the Centre-Clearfield district. Dr. Miller arrived in Bellefonte today and will remain over night, his mission being to show himself to the voters and personally set forth his views. Several Clearfield County Republicans accompanied Dr. Miller to this place, the number including Ashley Woolridge and Samuel R. Hamilton.

It isn't difficult to figure out why Rush township schools rank so high when one stops to consider the interest taken by the directors in the welfare of the children. County Superintendent Etters, in his address to the directors' convention Tuesday morning, said that Rush township ranked highest in the county in the matter of co-operation between directors and teachers. William Clark, A. S. Cross, Fred Eisenhauer and Samuel M. Twigg, four of the five directors in Rush township, started for Bellefonte in an automobile on Tuesday but found the roads so bad that most persons would have turned back. They did abandon their automobile, but not the trip, finally arriving here on an early afternoon train. They were too late for the convention proceedings, but their persevernce and good intentions made a hit with all who learned of the incident.

ISAAC M. THOMAS DEAD

Well Known Resident Passed Away Today Following Stroke.

Isaac Miller Thomas, a well known citizen and member of the old Thomas family, died suddenly at 7.30 o'clock this morning at his late home on Thomas Street. He suffered a first stroke last summer and while enjoying fairly good health since that time had not been any too strong in the last few weeks. However, he was feeling about as usual when he arose this morning. He dressed and was moving about the house when he suddenly collapsed.

Deceased was a son of the late William A. Thomas and was born in Bellefonte. He was 78 years old on April 4th, last. He was the last surviving member of the old Thomas family.

Surviving are his widow and these children: Lydia R., of Philadelphia; William A., of Tyrone; Isaac, Jr., Joseph, Arthur and Lulu at home.

front of his new home in Allegheny Street. The Special Committee reported having accepted William Shoil's bid of $47 for raising the roof at the Phoenix mill pumping station, and that of M. R. Johnson for $115 for a part wood and part cinder floor in the pumping station. Before adjourning Council directed the preparation of a note for $5,000, for six months, and one for $500, for one year, both at five percent, to take up notes for like amounts and maturing May 5th.

A Delightful House Warming

The Tyrone Herald last Saturday said: Mr. and Mrs. Allen S. Garman who occupy one of the magnificent second story apartments in the Wilson theatre block, were given one of the big surprises of their lives on Friday evening when about fifty of their friends gathered in to enjoy an old fashioned "house warming." The affair was very successfully handled by Mr. and Mrs. Milton Ross. The Garman's are always doing some one a kindness and in order to reciprocate, a few of their friends got together and planned this happy gathering held on Friday evening. Only recently they moved into their pretty apartments and every night some of their friends have been dropping in, but when the big bunch landed Friday evening they were completely overwhelmed, although they soon got next and entered into the pleasures of the evening. Delicious refreshments were served. During the course of the evening Mr. and Mrs. Garman were presented with a large basket fern and a beautiful boquet of flowers Tyrone Herald.

Dogs Killed Fawn.

Robert Morris, the grocer, was fishing for trout along Fishing Creek on Monday and reports having observed the carcass of a fawn lying off the road, probably a mile above Lamar station. The appearance of the body made it quite clear that the fawn had been killed by dogs.
